

The Camel, domesticated for more than 4000 years, lives side by side with man.

According to a well known saying, man becomes the parasite of his camel, in Arabic: saf + nat al-barr, due to his dependence upon 'the Ship of the Desert' because of its ability to travel long distances on rough terrain without food or water.

In fairly recent times, the camel has been used for racing.

The most renowned racing camels, come from the Southern Arabian region of Mahra in the Persian Gulf. They originate from camels called Mehari, (in Arabic mahr+ "del Mahra") which are known for their speed, and are also used by the Camel Military Corp, the Meharisti.

The Camel is not known for its beauty or elegance but mother nature never fails in her work. Its habitat, so inhospitable for many, has created an animal able to survive harsh desert conditions where only the sound of its hustle and bustle accompanies the silent journey of the caravans.
