

Quetzalcóatl

Aztec Civilization

Quetzalcóatl is the Aztec name of the feathered serpent god of ancient Mesoamerica, one of the most important deities for many Mexican and Central American civilizations.

Among the Aztecs, whose beliefs are well documented, Quetzalcoatl is revered as the god of wind, Venus, dawn, merchants and the arts, crafts and knowledge. The name "Quetzalcoatl" comes from the nāhuatl "quetzal [li] -cōhuātl". "Quetzalli" indicates something divine or precious (in some contexts it is intended as "beautiful", even not in body) while "Cōhuātl" means "Snake". According to some, it literally means Quetzal's snake with feathers (which refers to something divine or precious), although not everyone agrees. In fact, the Quetzal bird at the time was not called that. The various meanings referring to his name in other Mesoamerican languages are quite similar. The Mayans called it Kukulcán

Description of the pen

Measures: length : 148 mm - diameter: 16 mm Nib : in gold 18kt-

on the barrel is represented the serpent god Quetzalcóatl

The clip represents the Aztec sword (Macuahuitl)

Masterpiece handmade in Italy by goldsmiths artisan

Limited Edition 50 Fountain pen and 50 roller ball

Charging system for Roller ball Schmidt

Charging system for Fountain pen converter or cartridges

In three different version: 1) Sterling Silver Old Style

2) Sterling Silver and Enamels Turquoise blue

3) Bronze (avoid oxidation of bronze)

Quetzalcoatl

Aztec civilization

Handmade in Italy

