Inferno

700 years after Dante's death, the world remembers the great poet who gave Italy its language and the international masterpiece, the Divine Comedy.

In the poem, Dante begins his journey accompanied by the Roman poet Virgil and with him crosses the nine circles of hell, observing the sinners and the punishments inflicted on them according to the 'rule of retaliation'.

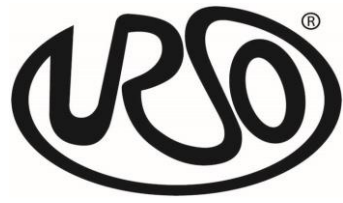

The poet draws on facts from Christian and medieval traditions, as well as events and characters contemporary to him during his journey through the various circles, finally arriving in Satan's presence who, with the movement of his wings, freezes the Cocytus lake, imprisoning the damned and thus begins the ascent towards the light, leaving the darkness of hell behind and returning to see the stars again.

Dante's metaphor is today more relevant than ever and once more powerfully offers a message of hope.
